SAMPLING TEXAS

Hope everyone recovered from the Texas-O.U. bash. If you weren't able to go, you missed a real treat. But fear not, the social season is really heating up and there will be similar "biggies" each month now. Up next is Halloween. Keep workin' on those costumes. Next week, This Week in Texas will fill you in on all the October 31st events worth attending. (P.S. You club owners let us hear from you so you won't be accidentally left out from our listings issue.) . . . As far as this week is concerned, the clubs seem to be going all out on their inflation fighter specials. Lately, it takes less and less money to get more and more bombed. Not to mention all the free food and good times that are going around. The tight money situation has really placed the club owners in a price war situation. . . . Some of the latest additions to the list include Rocky's in Houston, which now has free food and barbeque on Sundays from 2 to 4 p.m. Rocky and the ever-popular Barbara are your hosts on that one. Houston's Lazy J has extended its 50 cent beer bash to seven days a week, because of its popularity and the growing size of the crowds that are beginning to think of the Lazy J as their home away from home . . . In Dallas, you can get free draft beer every Wednesday night from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. at the Olive Branch. Also, the newly reopened Chuck's in Dallas has joined with the Crews Inn in offering wooden nickels from 5 to 7 p.m. Those wooden nickels are given with each drink and can be redeemed for a drink ANYTIME. The wooden nickel you get on Wednesday, for example, can be cash in on Friday or Saturday night, or just anytime, and that's a first! Incidentally, the new Chuck's is open from 4 p.m. to 2 a.m. on weekdays; and from 1 p.m. to 2 a.m. on Saturday and Sunday. Go by and welcome them back. It's going to become a very popular spot! . . . Want some clothing discounts? At the Union Jack in Dallas, Levi's and other famous name jeans and slacks have been absolutely slashed in price. The attire that is usually $14 to $18 can now be had for $4.99 to $9.88. Isn't it about time you gave your closet a face lift? And with prices like these, you'd be a fool not to do it now. Run, run, run. . . . Another good deal is the enchilada and salad dinners being featured at Houston's Ursula's this Sunday. The cost is $2.00 for the foods and fixin's and if you've ever seen the spread they put out, you now know what a bargain that is. Those who don't want to eat can still enjoy free admission to Ursula's on Sunday. . . . In the "Comin' and Goin' " category, please note that the Spur in Houston has closed temporarily as it undergoes an ownership and decor change. The new Spur owner is Billy Duncan. Meanwhile, the Surf Lounge in Houston is now re-opening, under the guidance of Bill and Jim of the Venture N. The opening date is slated for October 24th. And finally, in Odessa, the Fisherman's Wharf is going to be closed from October 20 to the 23rd for remodeling. . . . On the movie front, Houston's Locker will take you 20 Million Miles to Earth on the night of October 21st. Stars in that one, in addition to the real life stars, include

William Hopper and Joan Taylor. While on Thursday at Houston's Bayou Landing, they're trotting out the Slaves of Babylon, a campy old treat from a bygone era. Watch those g-strings, girls! . . . And speaking of entertainment, gays in the Dallas-Ft. Worth area now have their own radio show. It's produced by gay people for gay people and is called the "Just Before Dawn" show. It can be heard on station DCHU an FM station at 90 on your dial, every Wednesday at 7:00 p.m. and every Thursday afternoon at 1:00 p.m. Tune in and get off. The ultimate in public service . . . Gay public service work is still going strong in Galveston, too, as the Galveston Gay Society prepares to nominate permanent officers on the first Tuesday in December. That growing organization now has 111 members in just the few weeks it's been in existence. Also, for those of you interested, and many of you are -- the Dawn Winters Fund has now passed the $4,000.00 mark. That's encouraging. Very encouraging. . . . Well that's it for now. Get back to working on those Halloween costumes. And let's have some butch ones for a change. Show that flesh!

THE PHANTOM OF THE PARADISE

The Phantom of the Paradise was initially released almost a year and a half ago. It wasn't a super-great film and was unleashed on the public with little or no publicity. Consequently, it was completely and utterly ignored. Which turned out to be a stroke of luck.

Had Phantom of the Paradise gained large public attention when it was first released, it would have been forced to square off against the movie Tommy, head to head. And the Phantom would have suffered in the comparison.

But now Tommy is movie history and the eager public is ready to give The Phantom of the Paradise its box office day in court. And in that context, the old Phantom holds up rather nicely. It's a spectacular entertainment if you don't go in expecting too much and are willing just to sit there and let it wash over you.

As you might suspect, the Phantom of the Paradise is a modern day version of the old Phantom of the Opera story, with variations, of course. The story concerns a dedicated, and very serious, contemporary music writer. But his greatest work, a musical tribute to the life of Faust, is ripped off by a greedy, self-serving rock music mogul. The mogul, named Swan and portrayed by Paul Williams, steals our hero's music and gives it to one of the groups he manages, the Juicy Fruits, to perform. Needless to say, the dedicated young musician is not at all happy with the thought that his music is being so abused, and he sets out to rectify the matter.

But as it is with all heroes, difficulties are encountered in the noble one's quest for justice. For one, when our hero attempts to steal the master copy of Juicy Fruits recording off the record presser, he puts his head in exactly the wrong place. As a consequence, one side of his face, from the temple to just below the chin, is stamped with the record press, turning his left profile into an LP. (Without the hole, of course.)

Our hero is not happy. Rather than spend the rest of his life being the "life of the party" with the playable face, the songwriter seeks revenge. He vows vengeance. The Paradise is the rock musical Taj Mahal which the evil Swan has built to honor his great stars and sounds. It's the ultimate disco. Our hero becomes the Phantom, hell bent on turning the Paradise into something less than the safest place to be on any given Saturday or Sunday night.

The evil Swan's current superstar is a bitchy, but cowardly, queen who soon discovers that the Phantom does not take lightly to the nellie desecration of the Faust tribute. Soon it's blood and gore time for all those who stand between our hero and his idealism. The nellie queen, in particular, enjoys a death scene whose panoramic scope and fury surpasses all that have gone before. But why not? You'd be a little hacked if someone was stealing your life's work, with only a memento stamped on your face as payment.

Suffice to say, there's more to the plot. Much more. Things like "the girl" our hero loves, the various groups that make this the most bizarre musical gathering since cave man first tapped out "Ah one, and ah two and ah three" with dinosaur bones, and the destruction of Swan.

But the plot is really incidental. This film is for the eyes and ears, your brain need not function to enjoy it. Phantom of the Paradise is like Walt Disney's Fantasia, except real actors are used instead of animation. It's a visual orgy for those who have interest in set design, costumes, and are willing to forgive anything if the color is bright enough. For audiophiles, the soundtrack is intricate, without being befuddlingly complex; showy, without being ostentatious; and befitting to the mood and tenor of the film, without necessarily enhancing it.

The Phantom of the Paradise will, without doubt, become a "cult film." It has that special quality that will make people go see it every time it comes around. Those people who enjoy it on the first screening, that is. You don't walk away from this film feeling blah. You either love it or you hate it. It's as simple as that. And from early indication, the "loves" are going to win out. And rightfully so. It has a lot going for it.

The film buffs will enjoy it because it is the first time the Phantom of the Opera story has ever been attempted in modern musical form. The humorists will enjoy Phantom because of its sardonically macabre dialong, especially that of the nellie queen rock singer. The music folk have made Paul Williams a millionaire, so the score is a preset success simply based on the ability of the man who created it to assess public tastes. And the Paul Williams vocals in the score are meritous of audio attention. And finally, those who have bad backs will enjoy the Phantom because the movie is short in length. You go in, you get blitzed, and the next thing you know, you're in the lobby on your way out.

The Phantom of the Paradise is a movie for those who can forget all their problems and just sit back and enjoy the video and audio feast before them. It's not designed for those whose nerves get easily wrecked our just can't get "into it," as they say.

Phantom of the Paradise is like a Japanese art print — a bunch of fine lines that collectively form a lovely thing. But one word of warning, you'd better be in the mood to see it when you do enter the theater. If you try to fight the film, you're going to lose. You'll lose one of the most subliminally selective and delightful 98 minutes of film ever designed for freaks. Freaks, I tell you! Freaks! Chances are, you're gonna love it!

A FAIRY TALE OF SORTS

YOU WERE THE FERTILOME IN THE GARDEN OF MY AFFECTIONS

By M. W. MacDonald

Once there was a fisherman whose catches came only after long hours of waiting, bait hooked and pole held pensively. Out of habit, when a fish would by chance take the hook fast upon his casting of the line, he would reel it in and unhook it, throw it back to the water; for he was accustomed to long hours of waiting.

In the year of our lord 1974 a young man edging 21 was in the great web of pain which entangles victims, or perpetrators, of unrequited love. He was enamoured of someone he had met six months earlier, to whom he had made God knows how many romantic proposals, with whom he had been to bed exactly once (on the night of their meeting), for whom he was convinced he would accomplish the impossible or give up everything he held sacred, and by whom he was continuously rebuked, humiliated, taxed and insulted; for the object of this devotion, for reasons unrevealed and undiscussed, considered him repulsive to the touch and hideous to the eye.

How carelessly and desperately we scatter the seeds of our love. How seldom they grow where they may, how often they attempt to grow where they may not. He sat lingering over his misfortunes in a coffee shop. He was writing one of many pathetic letters to the . . .

HOLD IT. Forget who I am, I'm writing this story. I don't happen to think I'll finish it, either. Maybe some other time. Right now, I have better things to talk about.

I have decided, right here, right now, that in view of the fact that my muse didn't let the door hit her ass on the way out of my mind, I'll just dispense with the formalities and get a few things off my chest.

ITEM NUMBER ONE: For the information of whom it may concern, it is true that all (every one) of the short stories I have published in the last six months are based on my own personal experience. It is true, in keeping with the picky, vindictive nature of my personality I have aimed them at certain real individuals, with whom I've had a score to settle.

They were intended to be psychologically intimidating. I am tired of writing them. I'll keep on writing them. This is one of them.

ITEM NUMBER TWO: A poem, by me, entitled "Larceny": "You could discard feelings to the closet . . . Like dated fashions . . . So that one grungy morning I'd wake up to the theft of passions . . . And cry to the dirty sparrows who bicker on my lawn . . . All our nice friends call me up to congratulate you . . . They rife and ramble, remark and remind that you're gone . . . All the while saying just what I should do . . ."

ITEM NUMBER THREE: I as a writer have concluded that one of the characteristics of one's predicament as a writer rests mainly on one's prejudicial assumption that one is judiciously insane; and that one's condition, by decree of God (in whom one has the prerogative to not believe, and in most cases acts accordingly) can, was, is and shall worsen appreciably with the passing of each moment; that it shall do so with no hope of remedy; that it is, as such, an interminably terminal condition. Born bananas, go more bananas, die more bananas. I have arrived at this conclusion through private consultation, which, as it so happens, I conducted with myself.

ITEM NUMBER FOUR: A friend of mine reveals that he, personally, enjoys having sex with himself, because, among other things, he knows when he wants to come. He is not a writer, although he is a human being (I once considered all human beings writers), so I will apply his bit of thinking to myself, if not as a writer, then as a human being who happens to be one. I think it would be only beneficial, perhaps even pleasant, to have sex with myself more often. An apropos quote comes to mind: "And this is a typewriter. Here I punch, and wonder, am I practicing the world's oldest profession, onanism? Do I indulge in that counterfeit art of prostitution for the masses so that I may experience the dubious honor of having screwed myself?" That's by Charles Carper, who, as chance would have it, is a writer. I thought you'd like that.

ITEM NUMBER FIVE: To pull away from my lengthy yet somewhat self-satisfying discourse on writing and other deviant pastimes, I'd like to mention the fact that my personal life is a shambles. Enough said.

It seems to me that nobody is worth loving. Some people are worth being nice to, for different reasons: it makes one's life a little easier, or one's circumstances a bit more comfortable. But I've always been a fool for the sound of a voice, or the unmarred oblivion to be found in the distant stare of (ah!) blue eyes. Love can be, seemingly always has been for me, a one way street. Now, I can take it or leave it. It suits some people just fine.

My muse just slipped a note through the door. She says the boy in the coffee shop meets somebody and the new person falls in love with the boy, or pretends to; and for a while the boy thinks he has found somebody who can bring him out of his attachment to the hateful lover, but after a while of living together they too break up, and so he's still looking.

Me? I'm going out to seek new inspiration.

As affectionate affectations cease, the petals of our love grow pink, then brown, then withered and crisp to the touch. In a passion play of apathy we each arise out of bed and stumble off to the lavatory, flush down the toilet the miscarriage of affections, and then, saying goodnight ("I really enjoyed myself. . .") walk down winding cement walks to the avenues of loneliness. We pause. Look back. Walk on, like two caught in the throes of conversation pause and say, "How ever did we get off on that?"

ANSWERS

BY EVE

by Eve Williams

Dear Eve,

I have a straight friend that I have known for about a year and a half. She has no idea that I am gay and often times this puts me in a bind. Simple questions like "where did you go this weekend" or "who are you dating" still throw me for a loop. As of late, this situation has really been getting to me and, in a way, I feel dishonest always having to circumvent her questions. What do you think about me telling her the truth?

B. J.

Dear B. J.,

This situation, I suppose, comes up with most gays who have fairly close straight friends. Disclosing your true identity does not have to be terribly traumatic if handled carefully. First of all, has the subject of gays ever come up in conversation? Their feelings sometimes can indicate how liberal they are about gays. If you have no idea, try to search her out on the subject. Secondly (and really this is more important), do you feel she is a real friend? Can you trust her and has she indicated previously a sensitivity towards you doing your own thing? Ask yourself whether she knows you well enough to be able to put aside any stereotyped images of lesbians and still be able to see the real you. If you do decide to tell her, do it gently and give her time to take it all in.

Eve

Dear Eve,

I am sick of Fag Hags. There are a few that frequent the bars where I live. Half the time they seem to be putting the make on the gay men and all of the time making sure everyone notices them. What irritates me the most, however, is that they flaunt their bodies in their low-cut dresses, etc., around the gay women but seem to be too superior to even speak to any of us. What's with them?

S. Johnson

Dear S. J.,

Every gay bar does seem to have a certain number of Fag Hags. I hate to generalize about all fag hags since stereotyping them might be as inaccurate as straights referring to gays. So I asked around. It is natural to feel flattered when someone seems attracted to you. Some gay men have taken fag hags to bed. Yet most find the progressively demanding sexual overtures not only embarrassing but down right maddening. You men are quite a challenge. As for the gay women — either fag hags do feel superior or they are under the delusion that every lesbian wants them. Some fag hags are probably nice but their non-committal sexual role of going after the impossible and simply discounting alternatives seems odd. Any comments?

Eve
