They used to call you Angel Face, right? Then your sideburns grew all over your ears, and whatever it was they called a coiffe started raking hell with your social life.

Time you stopped praying and came on down to Jodi's. A Natural Hair Cut can cast out a lot of demons where care for your hair is concerned, and make you feel like a natural man.

Because every good boy deserves a nice head of hair.

The sounds of the gay disco are coming to Amarillo! A few years ago, who would ever have believed it. But slowly and surely, this former bastion of cow ropers and oil-covered red necks has acquired a healthy dose of hip. And now they've come all the way. The Old Plantation will open in Amarillo on Thursday, March 11, with free drinks from 8 to 10p.m. Former Dallas-ites Rick and David Eveys will be hosts when Amarillo moves in to the big time. If you're anywhere in the vicinity don't miss it! It's the biggest thing in the Panhandle since they discovered that a male cow and a female cow, if left alone, could manufacture a third cow.

In Dallas, entertainment is quickly becoming the hot commodity. At the Service Station, a live band provides the sounds of music, everything from country western to progressive, on Sunday nights. While over at the Chez Leslie: Alan Allison, Roxae and Artesia Wells are tearin' thing apart on Thursdays and Sundays.

One of the popular events in Dallas on Wednesday night, at 7p.m., is the Gay Community Program. The one-hour show can be heard on KCHU, 90.9 on the old FM dial. Tune in for a turn on.

And this final word from Dallas. The Gay Hotline, (214) 241-4118, needs both financial assistance and volunteer workers. It's a really good cause. Help if you can.

Turning now to Houston news, we'd like to toot our own horn. This Week in Texas (that's us, dummy) has opened a new office at 2110 Lexington, with office hours from 9a.m. to 5p.m., Monday thru Friday. Feel free to come by and give us all the dirt. Or better yet, give us the business. Our phone number remains the same, (713) 527-9111. Visitors welcome. Come see my ten tiny fingers race across the typewriter keyboard to the accompaniment of a stirring rendition of the ever-popular "Tea for Two."

On the Houston entertainment scene, Rhonda Lacey is no longer at Dirty Sally's on Friday and Saturday nights. While at the Inside Outside, facilities will be provided for astute game players. Come in and organize your own tournaments. Also upcoming will be Las Vegas Nite, with prizes and hysterics, plus periodic scavenger hunts. Everybody wins at the Inside Outside!

Two memos on new openings. Union Jack Clothing (a big-ee) has now opened in Houston with store hours from 10a.m. to 7p.m. They really know how to make you look good! And not to be rude, but some of you couldn't get over there soon enough (just kidding, chums). And on March 5th, the Barn opened new vistas for the western bar crowd. Saddle up and ride, cowboy!

Gotta go. Now that we are in this new, pissy office, I don't have time for small talk. Come by and see us. If the surroundings don't impress you, I'll find something that will.

And finally, a birthday wish goes to Lyle, from Bill.

a serial by John Gardner

from the previous issue

"I'm sorry I wasn't much fun," Burt said, as he sat in the chair of the hotel room putting on his shoes. "But it's hard to relax knowing that the room next door is where your parents are staying."

"Don't worry about it," Jerry responded quickly. "Besides, I had a great time." Jerry sat up in bed reaching across the bedside table for a package of cigarettes. "I've had the same problem myself. When I was a boy, I always found it difficult to play with myself in the bathroom while my mother was in the kitchen making mashed potatoes."

"I though you didn't have any," Burt questioned.

"Any what?" Jerry asked. "Mothers or mashed potatoes?"

"Cigarettes. When you first met me out in the hall waiting for my parents, you said you didn't have any cigarettes. Was that just a come-one to get me in here?" Burt asked.

Sheepishly, Jerry nodded his head. "You're not mad, are you?"

"No, not at all," Burt answered, sighing with relief. "Because if you had been telling me the truth, you would have been blind to not have seen those two packs of cigarettes on the table."

"That's true," Jerry added.

"And I've never had sex with a blind person. I wouldn't have known what to do." Burt continued. "Come to think of it, how would the blind person have known what to do? Studz News doesn't sell anything in Braille."

Suddenly, Burt heard voices in the hall. And even though the sound was muffled, he could tell they were going into the room next door.

"Oh my god — they're back," Burt said, jumping to his feet. "My parents are back! They're in the room next door."

"Why get so excited?" Jerry asked. "They've paid for it. At these rates, you had to expect them to show up sooner or later."

"You don't understand," Burt said, anxiously pacing the room. "I got into a bit of trouble earlier tonight. And now I'm going to have to face them."

"The police aren't looking for you, are they?" Jerry asked worriedly, suddenly concerned about his involvement with Burt. "You're not a pusher, are you?"

"Not unless someone is hooked on Judy Garland dresses!" Burt replied. "Get me a glass. Get me a glass!"

Jerry rose and walked to the bathroom. "Do you want one that's wrapped in paper. Or will a used one do?" Jerry asked.

"Either one," Burt answered.
"Just hurry. I just want to listen with it."

"This may come as a shock, but people don't wear glasses to hear. They wear glasses to see. What you want is a hearing aid," Jerry joked.

"Very funny, Just hurry. I'm going to miss something," Burt said impatiently.

Jerry returned with a glass, which Burt quickly placed against the wall. Putting the base of the glass to the wall, Burt put his ear against the open end, using it as a megaphone amplifier.

"What do you hear?" Jerry asked.

"Nothing," Burt answered sadly. "The wall is too thick."

"That's too bad," Jerry consoled. "Want to try using the water pitcher?"

"You'd think I'd be able to hear something," Burt thought aloud.

"Maybe they know the room is bugged. You'd better stop. I don't want to be a part of a Waterglass scandal," Jerry offered in a weak attempt at humor.

Burt slumped in his chair. "I'm ready to die. Just let them come and take me away."

"Don't be so upset," Jerry said. "No glass is worth all this trouble."

Burt rose, putting down the glass. He walked to the door and prepared to exit. "I'm ready to die," he groaned. A battered warrior preparing to face the enemy.

The Screen Shop

by Christopher Savitch

The most fascinating and intriguing aspect of "Gable and Lombard" is the background, both artistic and historical. It's a story whose absurdity is alleviated only by the factuality that made it reality. It's a love story about two persons who "paid their dues" to a society that no longer exists. . . . a society outraged that a star was "seeing" another star — who was still married. Had Gable and Lombard lived in the society that created Sonny and Cher, there would have been no story. . . . nor the unique "feel" of this film.

For those of you who may have tuned in to this century a bit late, you should know that the film is based on what, at the time, was a major scandal, although perhaps not quite as earth-shaking as this movie pretends, but who's to argue. Carol Lombard, the comical 1930s answer to Fanny Brice, was lover to Clark Gable, a married Clark Gable. This state of affairs did not sit lightly with the American public nurtured by the "Wizard of Oz" and "Andy Hardy." Even "Gone With the Wind" failed to remove the building tarnish that threatened Gable's career. Both Gable and Lombard risked their careers for their love affair. And if this sound like the sort of stuff movies are made of, it is. And that's why "Gable and Lombard" is now at your local movie house.

As a "local color" entertainment piece, the film holds its own. Admittedly, no one, at this time, could deliver a realistic rendition of the king of the screen. Especially James Brolin. But he had the guts to give it a try and manages to lose himself in the script to the degree that deserves applause. Jill Clayburgh fares better as Lombard, because the reality of the original Lombard does not loom as heavily as does the reality of the original Gable. Accordingly, the scripting for the Lombard character allows a bit more artistic license and a "heightening" that manages to hold the whole film together, as best it can.

Viewing the film, on its own terms, as an entertainment proves pleasant enough. Despite all its gimmickery and cliché presentation, it is fascinating to "see" the mammoth studios in operation during a time gone by. To see the characters from the "Wizard of Oz" walking from the studio lunch room, to see recreated portions of the making of "Gone With the Wind," and to see the hoardes of "little old ladies" who wouldn't stand for the slightest bit of "frolic" in films. It's a time gone by. Well worth a memory, however "heightened."

The film often conveys that special shallowness usually reserved for "made for TV" films. But through it all, little tidbits of enjoyment here and there do manage to come together in a conclusion that leaves a major portion of the audience in tears. So, it's not art! It leaves 'em cryin'. And that's a lot more than many recent treks to the movie house are able to induce.

The film is rated R, not for what is shown, but rather for what is said. Primarily the more than salty language of Ms. Lombard. She's one of those characters that is just crude enough to make you love her to death. (Especially when she presents Gable with a penis-warmer, a stocking of sorts for a cold night.)

"Gable and Lombard" is a light fantasy in facts. It makes no effort to rise above that classification. And for that reason alone, it's a good investment on the price of admission. And the odds are highly favorable that you'll have a good time, too. Go for enjoyment. The film delivers.

ANSWERS BY ADAM

by Adam Dennis

Dear Adam, Is the rumor that the CBS afternoon game show, "The Match Game," is produced by a staff of gay people — and most of the panelist and the host of that show are gay? — Gary B., Galveston

That bit of gossip has been going hot and heavy for two years now. I have my opinions, but since I have no concrete facts to back it up I will not engage in idle chatter or gossip. And since you don't have any facts on the matter, either, I suggest just watching the show carefully and drawing your own personal conclusions. (Don't sit too near the set. Those queens are really tacky.)

Dear Adam, I've just finished a news magazine that had a little blurb in it . . . to the effect that it is impossible for a person to tell, in most cases, whether another person is gay or not. Bullshit! When I walk down the street, I can tell who is gay and who is not. It's just a sixth sense that gay people have. Gay people, even butch ones, have a certain way of "carrying" themselves and a certain "look" that can be spotted by other gay people. Don't you agree? — Oliver A., Beaumont

For the most part, yes. I think it's one of those "takes one to know one" situations. So I wouldn't hold my breath while waiting for our nation's leading psychologists to understand the "sixth sense" or write about it if they do. However, I think your "senses" are highly dependent on how "out" emotionally the person is. If a person is so uptight about being gay that he refuses to admit it to himself and "come out," he is probably a holder of a Master of Straight degree and is so emotionally straight-jacketed that he doesn't send out any vibrations at all. Gay or straight.
